Going out in NYC,
decided together.

In five years, nobody will decide where to go out in a group chat.

Going out is a coordination tax.

Discovery is solved. Deciding isn't.

Beli

proved we trust friends, not stars.

Partiful

proved private plans live on the phone.

The group chat

is still where decisions go to die.

Instaplan does three things.

01 Discover events your friends rate.

02 Mark yourself "out" tonight.

03 Swipe with your group to decide.

Group decisions, gamified.

Tinder-style swipe-to-match for plans. Everyone votes. The match wins. No one negotiates.

Three swipes. One plan.

Four friends. Same deck of curated events. First match drops a proposal in the chat. The whole loop closes in under a minute.

Nobody owns deciding.

Bars. Venues. Restaurants. Promoters.
Anyone who'd want their spot in front of a group of four about to decide where to spend Saturday.
